Plotplan. This product was developed in the late 1970s by a joint effort between Brunel University London, Technical University of Delft, and the department of mechanical engineering and transport at Delft Technical University (Delft University of Technology) in the Netherlands. This is also where the term "plotter" originates. The first version of the product was named PLOTPLAN, a truncated version of the original name Plotplan. The first AutoCAD model, released in 1982, was the first to use the term AutoCAD, and the name was chosen because it was more descriptive of the product's functions. AutoCAD version 1.0 was
