I am not certain what should I answer to questions. I like answering questions in Stack Overflow, because it is fun. However, I have doubts in specific questions. Example questions: How do I find some information about this problem on stack overflow? What should I use as a kernel: Linux or Windows? My answers: I don't know, I wouldn't know where to begin (I don't use Linux, because I don't want to learn it in order to answer the questions). I would use linux, because I don't have any windows computer. I don't want to destroy my old computer, and I can easily install new OS if I need to. Is it ethical to answer a question that doesn't require me to use my knowledge and skill to answer it? If so, do you think that the above example questions are worthy to be answered? A: In this case you could provide a link to a good answer. But do not hesitate to provide a meaningful answer. A: I would suggest answering them as the regulars here have answered. For example, you can say that you don't know, because it is off topic. You can also answer with a Windows solution, even if you know Linux. However, my opinion is that you should not answer Linux questions, if you are not an experienced Linux user. Your answer may be technically correct, but the answer won't be fully appreciated. In addition to that, sometimes the question is highly subjective (or opinion based). If you encounter such questions, it is advisable to either leave a comment, downvote or vote to close the question. A: If you'd normally be afraid to answer a question like this, I think it's perfectly reasonable to try to answer it. It's a question about a technical problem that a lot of people have, but it's not a question which your particular skills can answer in a way that 3da54e8ca3
