Adiponectin is an adipocyte-derived protein present in circulating levels in higher concentrations in women than in men. Its exact physiological role is not completely understood, but recent data indicates that adiponectin has insulin-sensitizing effect and anti-inflammatory properties. Due to opposite effects of adiponectin, an increase in its plasma levels may be beneficial for the treatment of type 2 diabetes and cardiovascular diseases, whereas low plasma levels have been related to the development of insulin resistance. We present here an overview of structure, signal-transduction, and the role of adiponectin in the development of insulin resistance and cardiovascular diseases. We also review the association of adiponectin polymorphisms with insulin resistance and cardiovascular diseases, and discuss the possibility of using adiponectin as a drug target for therapy. We also present a list of the most investigated adiponectin polymorphisms and their effect on adiponectin plasma levels and their relationship with type 2 diabetes and cardiovascular diseases.// Copyright (C) 2015 by rr- // This 3e33713323
