Here is a link: Abstract Real-time monitoring of surgical tools is necessary for surgical practices to ensure surgical safety and efficiency, particularly for minimally invasive surgeries. However, there is limited access to real-time monitoring in surgeries due to its specific requirements of surgical instruments and difficulties in obtaining visual images. Here we introduce a smart and robust monitoring system to track the distance of surgical tools. The system is composed of a metal-based near-infrared (NIR) wavelength detector, a circuit-switching circuitry, an ultrahigh-sensitive single-pixel photodetector, and a microcontroller. Using the NIR wavelength detector, the distance of surgical tools can be measured by converting the received NIR wavelength signal into an electrical voltage signal. When two or more of the surgical tools are used in parallel during surgery, the distance between them can be calculated as a linear combination of their corresponding voltages. With an ultrahigh-sensitivity single-pixel photodetector and a microcontroller, the system is capable of detecting the NIR wavelengths with extremely low background noise. We demonstrated the system's accuracy with a range of 0–1.5 cm for various NIR wavelengths. More importantly, this device has been applied to the medical practice and has achieved real-time monitoring of surgical tools, including micro forceps and scalpels. We have shown the feasibility of this monitoring system for the real-time analysis of surgical tools during minimally invasive surgeries.Q: Connect to kafka-java I am trying to connect to Kafka with Kafka-java 1.0.0 The code is given here public class KafkaConsumer { private Properties properties; private KafkaConsumer
