Fla. -- T.J. Simers is undoubtedly the Miami Dolphins' best offensive lineman, but he knows it's not his job to lead. When he was asked to be the de facto leader of the team following an offseason that found the Dolphins struggling to find a quarterback and suffering a quarterback controversy, Simers said in a radio interview Friday that he didn't feel equipped to do it. "I'm just trying to be myself," Simers said. "I'm me. I'm trying to be me and trying to do the best that I can, be the best I can be and try to help everybody be the best that they can be." That approach was evident when Miami's offensive line took the field on the first play of the team's rookie minicamp on Tuesday, as it was Simers and center Mike Pouncey who both attempted to pick up the first-year quarterback, Josh Rosen, who had the lead block on running back Arian Foster. Simers and Pouncey were among the final seven players to report to the team on Friday, with veterans Mike Pouncey and Samson Satele still not in attendance, while left tackle Laremy Tunsil
