What's more, if you were to reach into that wallet in a crisis and find that you don't have enough money on you, the consequences would be dire. Most of our money is in banks and other banking institutions, not to mention credit cards and cheques. It would be really hard to pay for things with this kind of infrastructure, and not much of us would be prepared to carry cash with us to avoid banking, credit and cheques. I appreciate how vital banks and credit cards are to daily life, but we need to consider the broader consequences of using them in a crisis. If they suddenly break down, our most critical utilities — water, power, telecommunications, transport, health — will also fail. It's more than easy to go off and speculate about what will happen in a global financial meltdown. Tory MP Steve Webb points out that water, power and telecommunications industries account for some 17 percent of the UK's GDP. The UK's financial, utilities and transport industries are as important in their way as the defence and health industries. A recent US Department of Defense report states that the global failure of the infrastructure systems — communications, fuel supply, power and transportation — could cost $1.6 trillion in annual direct losses, and $1.7 trillion in indirect economic losses. There is no way we can count on the money we have in our bank accounts, credit cards, cash and even businesses not to run out and completely collapse. The value of our assets is a lot less than the value of the economy. We have to start thinking about an economy d41b202975

thuja, the 'evergreen' tree of prehistoric northern Thailand is already becoming seriously depleted, and future supplies will be very limited. Although Taal tree often used interchangeably with Haramatia, the fact is, that Taal is not related to Haramatia at all. Taal is an entirely different plant with different traits. If one of the most innovative researcher of the Thai antiquities in northwest of Thailand has been seriously and consistently criticizing Taal as Haramatia he has been totally wrong. How come there was no Taal tree in prehistoric Pak Thong Chang while they were growing in nearby areas, but they suddenly appeared in Pung Tung Chon area when it was excavated? It was assumed that the plant came from the 1,400 years old mainly older than Teak tree, but someone long time ago already recognized something is wrong. First of all, different method of land cultivation could explain why there are more Taal in Pung Tung Chon area than in Pak Thong Chang. Taal was growing in the wetland area. Now you can understand why. The Taal was growing in a natural wetland, kind of a lignivorous bush, and the seed of Taal is dispersed over the floating vegetation in the water in this wetland. So why is it still in Pung Tung Chon area while it was absent in Pak Thong Chang area if the cultivation comes from the 1,400 years old? The answer is so obvious. In Pak Thong Chang area, there is a hill and from the hill, the land slope down to the water several years ago. That is why Taal planted in this area. When the land was already far away from the water, the Taal was cultivated to be thrived. In fact the Taal does not grow on the top of the hills in the water, but normally it grows in paddy field where there is plenty of water. Taal is thought to have been used as a kind of medicine in 14th century. The evolvment of the Plant during the last 500 years has been explained two major development:1. improvement of cultivation system to make harvest smoother. Even the Taal was planted for medicine, the plant was a medicine 2. Molecular biological variation Tropical tree was introduced in the north of Thailand more
