Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of equipment used by construction crews in the building and repairing of structures. More particularly, the invention relates to a pallet attachment for a backhoe loader which allows a pallet of any size to be attached to and removed from the loader. 2.

Description of the Prior Art Backhoes, and other similar equipment, have been used for many years to construct and repair various types of structures, such as fences, walls, etc. The backhoe is typically used with a pile driver that is adapted to be coupled to the back of the loader. The pile driver and backhoe are used to drive holes into the ground in which the support legs of the pile will be placed. The backhoe further includes an arm that is movable with respect to the back of the loader. The arm is often connected to an inner arm pivotally connected to the backhoe body. The inner arm is attached to the loader so as to permit the arm to swing outwardly from the loader in a substantially vertical direction. The arm is further attached to a pile driver bit so that the pile driver bit can be driven into the ground beneath the pile support legs. Backhoe loaders are known which include a shank with a pair of legs mounted thereon. The shank, arms and legs can be mounted on the loader either as a separate attachment, or as an attachment to the lower jaw of the loader.

These prior art loaders often include a shank, arm and leg combination known as a "skid" loader. The skid loader is typically a low loader as it is used to dig trench for pipes and the like, and for other low loader type functions. The loader includes a shank, arm and leg combination for digging of such a trench. When loading with the prior art skid loader is completed the loader is moved close to the area where the pile support legs will be located and the loader bucket is moved to a position close to the ground. The pile driver arm is then released from a retracted position and is then extended to a raised position. The pile driver arm is then aligned to direct the pile 6d1f23a050
