In reality, La emancipada is composed of a total of nine episodios. The first, La cautiva (1), narrates the liberation of a young woman, Marie, who is forced to become a slave by the law of the city. The heroine escapes from her legitimate prison and flees her unhappy situation by accomplishing a heroic feat which is, in fact, a commentary on a theme of the text: a woman has an inalienable right of freedom. Marie is unlike the other characters in La emancipada: she does not appear as an object of desire of an unknown suitor, but as a woman who is free to follow her own way without the support of men. This is the beginning of the life of liberty we are accustomed to live today. In the second episodio, La quimera del capuzo (2), the protagonist of La emancipada, Emiliana, a young woman, decides to leave her honorable mother and father and find freedom and independence in the family of her companion and future lover, Baltasar. The novel ends with the birth of the first child for Emiliana, a baby girl. In the third and last episodio, La mujer devota (3), Baltasar breaks his vow and marries Emiliana, and has three sons. The novel closes when Emiliana, once she has become a mother, decides to return to her parents and father her children, Marcial and Elena, by Baltasar. The last episode, La libertad con picaresca (4), brings us to the present, where the issue of female freedom is still a topic in Ecuador. We read an episode told from the point of view of Marcial, Baltasar's son, and thus we discover in a new, truthful way the liberation and the project of building a new society. In fact, and this is an important part of my thesis, La emancipada can be considered the most complete and adequate novela completa of the entire Latin American oral tradition.

She was taken as a model for several women of the second half of the nineteenth century, such as Madame de Staíz, Fanny Leubron (d. 1881) and Emma Orczy (d. 1933). But her finest achievement in the field of literature was the first Chilean novel, La Emancipada (1863), which was one of the first social novels and first novel for women in South America. The second part is dedicated to the analysis of the characters of the story. First, however, we will need to discuss the most important novelistic features to serve as a basis for our analysis, for which we will need to distinguish the two major characters. There are only two characters, who are therefore especially important. Adela is the revolutionary, who strives for freedom of the general public and of women. Manzu, on the other hand, is the man of action, who seeks satisfaction in the lie of the flesh. The former is emancipated from the woman and from sexuality, the latter is emancipated from the man and from freedom. Both of them are emancipated because they are rebellious against traditional gender relations, and both of them are emancipated because they are in a relationship of love, which is a lie of the flesh, and which cannot exist within the patriarchal social order. Yet, while Manzu lies with his beloved, Adela lies with him, and in this they share a dual freedom: the woman is the freedom of the intellect, the man is the freedom of the spirit. As such, we can understand this as the first form of the emancipation of women, which took place before the second, which remains within the bounds of patriarchy, and which is reflected in the heterosexual relationships within a relationship of love. Nonetheless, while both are emancipated from the lie of the flesh, both are bound to it. But both are emancipated from the man and from the woman, and thus are equally double emancipated in this manner. Let us now examine these two characters in more detail. 5ec8ef588b
