Lightroom 5 is an impressive photo editing application. It is one of my favorites, if not my favorite. Lightroom 5 has a streamlined user experience that makes it a pleasure to use. The user interface is smooth, and the program does a nice job of giving you control over your common editing tasks. You can use the Tags Viewer, which brings up an interface allowing you to view your tags. In addition to viewing tagged files, you can look at the tags of one file based on the tags of another. See “How to Use Lightroom 5’s File Manager” for details about the Details View. However, the main benefit of tagging is that it focuses your editing efforts. You can use the Find feature to find any tag or set of tags. Once you find a file or series of files you want to work on, the bulk of your time is saved. You only need to tweak the tags of files that don’t fit your intentions. You can also move, copy or delete tags in the same interface. As previously mentioned, Lightroom 5 provides the ability to use filters with RAW files. With Lightroom 4, you couldn’t apply them, so you had to convert your images to a different file type. Lightroom 5 supports conversions between many types of RAW files. Some cameras support only one. The IR conversion is fairly easy. You can use the currently selected filter in the Lightroom interface. The Import and Export panel is largely unchanged (the show labels on the RHS are a new addition). In the past, you couldn’t see a list of all your files if you imported them using a specific source. The Choose Files dialog, which pops up when you add one to a collection, is no longer necessary. You can now drag files from the library to the overview panel in the upper half of the window. Using the Sort By option, you can organize your images by any criteria you like.

Adobe Sensei AI (Artificial Intelligence) technology is also new in Photoshop, delivering true machine intelligence for a more robust creative process. The technology automatically analyzes the types of objects and content in a design, and learns to identify patterns and behaviors like positioning and placement. Since humans do not recognize all of these things, the technology reacts to the statistics of the image and performs an analysis without any user input. The result of this process is a faster creative process that ultimately improves the quality of the end product. It also includes tools such as exposure, contrast, dynamic range, brightness/contrast, lighten, saturate, label, levels, auto levels, unsharp mask, blur, sharpen, noise reduction, split toning, colorize, blur, hue/saturation, desaturate, sepia, dodge, burn and clone.
