The present invention relates generally to a memory subsystem, and more particularly to a memory subsystem having a memory controller with an error handling scheme. Computer systems generally include a main memory which is divided into two sections, a fast cache, which is referred to as a cache, and a cold or main memory. Generally, the main memory is used to store data and/or instructions that are currently being used by the computer system. As the computer system operates, various data and instructions are retrieved from the main memory. These data and instructions are stored in the cache until the data and instructions are needed. Upon receipt of an access request, the data and instructions are retrieved from the cache and provided
